

Graduate School of International Relations

Admission policy

A person who has already earned an undergraduate degree and therefore acquired the knowledge and ability necessary for conducting conceptual, analytical research connected to the notion of "globalization in international societies." Furthermore, a person who demonstrates a continuous effort to become a researcher, or sophisticated career person, forming a platform with his/her own stance in order to create new paradigms in the field of international relations.